

News / Asia

Youth Driving Change in Cambodian Gender Norms

Print Comment Share:

FILE - Cambodian students are seen waving national flags during Independence Day celebrations in Phnom Penh.

FEATURED VIDEOS

In Historical First, Arab-Led Parties Unite for Israeli Elections

Comment \(0\)

VOA SPECIAL REPORT

RELATED ARTICLES

Cambodian Activists Win Award for Work to Combat Violence Against Women

Cambodia Still Lags Behind Many UN Development Goals

Rights Group Calls for Political Reform in Cambodia

Jennifer Smith, Soksreinith Ten

February 19, 2015 1:04 PM

WASHINGTON—Currently women political leaders are not creating a substantial impact in Cambodia. But a new report from the U.S. Agency for International Development says the symbolic representation of women leaders is shifting the attitude of young Cambodians, who are the driving force for greater equality.

Despite policy requirements from the Cambodian government to “mandate female representation on leadership committees,” male leaders remain prominent across all areas of the government, says the report titled “Women’s Leadership as a Route to Greater Empowerment.”

The report finds one of the greatest factors restraining women’s empowerment is a lack of self-confidence and support from their family and community. Although support from men and the Cambodian government is increasing, “cultural norms” are inherently preventing women from pursuing political leadership roles and participating in public engagement.

The program evaluator for the USAID report, Darcy Ashman, explains traditional codes of conduct for Cambodian women continue to function as a barrier to empowerment.

Download the VOA News Mobile App

ALL ABOUT AMERICA

DAY IN PHOTOS

"Because the culture says to women, 'You belong at home. It is men who are in the public eye.' As a rule, they tend to not have the confidence to take on those roles," Ashman said.

Self-confidence

Politicians, such as female member of parliament Mu Sochua, agree a lack of self-confidence is the main challenge.

"Very often women decide not to stand for office because they are not sure of their ability. In this case, this has nothing to do with the political party," she said.

Women in Cambodian leadership:

Senate: 14.8%

Members of parliament: 20.3%

Ministers: 10.7%

Secretary of State: 20.5%

Provincial Governor: 0%

Appellate Judges: 7%

Source: USAID

Cambodia Population:

15,458,332

Source: CIA Factbook

Additionally, opportunities for women to pursue public roles are limited because of their traditional responsibility to care for the household and support the family income.

Sopheap Chak, Cambodia Center for Human Rights director, agrees with the USAID report that Cambodian social structures have placed women at a disadvantage. But she says support from her family was a big motivation for her to become a leader.

"As a Khmer woman, I feel that although the society outside of the home tends to discriminate against women, I am lucky to have a supporting family that encourages me to go to school and that treats their sons and daughter equally," Sopheap Chak says.

Dr. Chhiv Kek Pung, a prominent human rights activist and director of Licadho, shares her journey of becoming leader, saying support from her husband makes it easier for her to be a wife and a human rights activist.

"I am also lucky that my husband understands and supports me and my participation in society," says Chhiv Kek Pung.

Education

Experts in women's empowerment and political leadership often cite a lack of opportunity for women to access high quality education. This limits women from being socially and politically active, especially in rural communities.

Dr. Trude Jacobsen, a Northern Illinois University professor who authored a book on the history of women politicians in Cambodia, explained that "female millennials are very much engaged in trying to, sort of, augment the position of women. I think that still remains very much a focus of urban-oriented youth - people who actually have access to education. Whereas, in rural communities, people still tend to see female roles as subjects to their husbands and to their parents."

As an urban resident, Kounila Keo, a Master Student in Public Policy at Lee Kuan Yew School, says women have an equal opportunity to receive an education in Cambodia.

"As a Khmer woman, I have a personal, familial, and societal responsibility.

CIRCUMVENTING CENSORSHIP

An Internet Primer for Healthy Web Habits

As surveillance and censoring technologies advance, so, too, do new tools for your computer or mobile device that help protect your privacy and break through Internet censorship.

More

MORE ASIA NEWS

Indian Bride Quits Wedding After Groom Fails Math Test

Apple Watch Tests China's Luxury Market

World Bank Chief Welcomes China-backed Development Bank

North Korea Test Fires 7 Surface-to-Air Missiles

Taiwan Rebuffs China's Suggestion of Joint World War II Commemoration

Foreign Workers in Australia Win Exploitation Case

Category 5 Cyclone Heads for Vanuatu

US Students Losing Interest in China as Dream Jobs Prove Elusive

Swedish Court Blocks Deportation of Purported Korean Teen

Pakistani Splinter Group Rejoins Taliban Amid Fears of Isolation

More Articles

BLOGS

Science World

Science Scanner: Milky Way Bigger than Thought, Hydrothermal Activity on Saturn Moon, New Way to Fight Cavities & Gum Disease, Dwarf Galaxy Surprises Scientists 20 hours ago

Mars Once Abundant With Water 3 days ago

I think that as women, we have to strongly believe in ourselves that we can pursue higher education and do important work in society, and be independent," she said.

The report confirms there is a slight change in attitude to "support both men and women as political leaders."

Women matter

Twenty-five year old Kimlay Leav, the President of U.S. Ambassador's Youth Council, says he strongly supports women leaders.

"When it comes to women's political leadership, I believe that they can help better design policies at the local and national level to deal with issues such as economic prosperity and political atmosphere, particularly issues affecting women and children," says Kimlay Leav.

Another member of the U.S. Ambassador's Youth Council, Chansatya Meas, said the situation in Cambodia motivates her to become a leader.

"Having many women leaders in the society motivates me to become one, but that is not always the case. I personally want to become a leader. And I think because of a lack of women leaders, I am strongly motivated to become a leader," she said.

As part of its Millennium Development Goals, the Cambodian government aimed at having 30 percent of the Parliament and Senate represented by women, but this goal has not been achieved.

But according to the USAID report, although the current situation for women leaders in Cambodia is primarily symbolic, their presence is contributing to a shift that supports women leaders who can actually effect change.

This report was produced in collaboration with VOA's Khmer Service.

Print

Comment

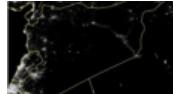

Share:

Tweet 37

Recommend Share 1.5k G+1 3

Pin It

YOU MAY LIKE

War Has Left Syria in the Dark, Images Show

Eighty-three percent of lights across country have gone out since conflict began there four years ago, analysis finds More

VOA Exclusive: Nigeria Brings S. African, Foreign Mercenaries Into Boko Haram Fight

Presence of non-Nigerian soldiers from outside region fighting on Nigerian soil injects a new element into tight presidential election campaign More

Study: Adjusted Work Hours Could Cure 'Social Jet Lag'

Researchers coin term to describe foggy feeling which affects many people and their job performance More

Comment on this forum

The Best Science Images – February 2015 10 days ago

The Student Union

Three Steps to Making New Friends in the U.S. 7 days ago

Students Speak: On Having Surgery in the U.S. 10 days ago

"Insure" You'll Stay Healthy in the US 14 days ago

Most Viewed

1. Iran's Ayatollah Slams Republican Senators' Letter
2. Fallout Seen Worldwide From Republicans' Letter to Iran
3. Report: Home Raided After Ferguson 'Ambush'
4. Nigeria's President: Boko Haram Trained with Islamic State
5. White House Crash Signals More Trouble for Secret Service

Most Emailed

Most Discussed

Comments

There are no comments in this forum. Be first and add one

SERVICES: Podcast RSS Mail Subscription Mobile

VOANews.com

USA

Africa

Asia

Mideast

Europe

Americas

Science & Technology

Health

Arts & Entertainment

Business & Economy

Blogs

Video

Editorials

About VOA

Media Relations

Contact Us

Job Opportunities

Terms of Use/Privacy Policy

Our Languages

Usage Requests

Our Partners

RFE/RL

Radio Free Asia

MBN

Radio Marti

Our Broadcasts

Frequencies and Schedules

Pronunciation Guide

Broadcast Programs